"EMDR...can target the cultural transmission of racism, sexism, class expectations, and the increasingly narrow parameters of acceptable appearance, interests and personality. It can also transform the effects of the generational transmission of destructive beliefs, identities and emotional states... We can help people accept themselves even when they are bombarded with external messages that they are unacceptable."

CULTURAL COMPETENCE & HEALING CULTURALLY-BASED TRAUMA W/EMDR THERAPY—OCT 14-15, 2016

Training Description

Cultural experiences and societal dynamics, for better and for worse, are fundamental dimensions of every human being's life and should be integrated into a general clinical approach. For many people, personal identity is intertwined with social identity and the welfare of one's cultural groups. Culturally linked experiences and values can be sources of great meaning and sustaining personal resources. At the same time, hostile social forces of discrimination, stigmatization and oppression can define or confine an individual's sense of self and position in society. Whether explicit or more implicit, the many "isms" that persist in the world can limit human potential and threaten fundamental human dignity.

The impact of culturally based trauma can be understood and treated effectively with added awareness and specific strategies throughout the 8-Phase EMDR treatment approach. This workshop will help identify client manifestations of internalized stigma/oppression and externalized prejudice toward others as they link to client difficulties. Keys to assessment, preparation and target selection will be covered.

Research supported information and theory from the fields of social psychology and social work will be integrated within the AIP model to predict the profound and unique capacity EMDR therapy offers for addressing culturally based trauma.

Relevant theory and practical strategies will be illuminated by case examples including clips from video-taped clinical sessions.

Theory and Practice:

This will be an active learning experience. In addition to the didactic presentations and discussion, multiple practicum experiences will allow for deeper exploration of the core concepts and treatment strategies.

Content includes:

- Steps to develop cultural competence
- Welcoming culture into psychotherapy
- The hidden importance of culture
- Understanding internalized social trauma
- Enriched AIP understanding of social information processing
- Methods to enhance and restore social dignity
- Considerations across the 8 Phase Protocol
- Effective Phase 1 Assessment questions
- Identifying culturally influenced beliefs
- Target selection strategies
- Innovative protocols
- Special considerations for various cultural populations
- Video case examples

Integrated Theory and Research from the fields of social work and social psychology including:

- Evolution of social categorization
- Impact of social identity: benefits and difficulties
- "In-group"/"Out-group" implications
- "Higher status:"/"Lower status" implications
- MRI findings in the prejudicial response
- Research on desensitization strategies
- Conclusion: EMDR can make a big difference

Objectives

Participants at this workshop will be able to:

1. Describe core concepts of cultural competence and how to integrate them into EMDR therapy.
2. Describe the relevance of cultural experiences and social identities to overall client wellbeing.
3. Describe strategies to incorporate social identities in EMDR treatment.
4. Integrate cultural considerations into assessment and case formulation.
5. Describe treatment strategies to identify and reprocess culturally-based trauma including the internalized impact of discrimination/stigmatization/oppression.
6. Describe strategies to identify and dismantle social prejudice with EMDR therapy.
